

Jamille Harrell-Sims, Ph.D., is a communications, family studies, and trauma specialist. She is an adjunct professor teaching across disciplines for several colleges and universities, and she has conducted numerous trainings on cultural competency. As a retired probation officer and community liaison, she has extensive knowledge of case plans and has worked collaboratively with marginalized families. Harrell-Sims writes curricula for community programs and conducts social science research to study vulnerable populations. In addition, she is the chief executive officer of a community-based nonprofit and a life coach.